Major storm misses area, power outages, other problems hit

Don Stebbins uses a chain saw to cut a fallen limb as part of city cleanup from Wednesday's ice storm. Several inches of snow missed the area.

Hoopeston and Rossville were spared the several inches of snow predicted but ice-covered trees and power lines caused other problems for residents.

Rossville was without power for most of Wednesday night due to downed lines. Molly Culbert still had no power Thursday morning after tree limbs snapped two lines at her Chicago St. home.

In Hoopeston, parts of the city experienced power outages at times and power flickered but no long-term outages were reported.

A combination of power outages and cable interruptions made for frustration for sports fans trying to watch the Illinois-Ohio State basketball game. Another television snafu occurred early Thursday when some parents said an area television station mistakenly listed Hoopeston schools as closed. Hoopeston and Rossville schools dismissed early Wednesday but were in session Thursday.

City workers got an early start in Hoopeston Thursday, first salting streets, then clearing broken limbs, especially from North Market and North Sixth Ave. Main roads were clear before traffic to school started but side streets were icy through most of the day.

Further precipitation is not expected for the weekend.
