Indoors and Outdoors

By Molly Culbert

Sunday, the last day of May, was a great day for gardeners. It was also the last day for my grandchildren before they had to go back to their homes in California and Kansas City, so I wasn't here at the shop much, but while I was, I thought how nice it is that there's a place where there is still peace and solitude, there in the garden with a hoe.

They are still planting beans, tomatoes, peppers and zucchini. Sounds good, doesn't it? Actually, with the moisture in the ground, there's no reason you can't plant a lot of things. It's a long time until the fall Harvest. Don't forget the herbs, especially basil. Did you know there's an herb that is a sugar substitute? And a plant that keeps dogs out of the garden, and, we think, rabbits? There's a plant that repels mosquitoes some swear by, and that is kind of pretty, too. Try it nature's way.
