Business owner, residents may work to solve disagreement

Residents of Hoopeston's northwest side are expected to meet to resolve differences regarding zoning in the area.

However, a business owner there says he has not heard from any of the residents.

Glenn Hackney, co-owner of Hoopeston Repair, said he's willing to work with residents in the area, but added he has not been approached by neighbors since Monday's city planning commission hearing.

At issue is whether property in the 200 block of North Ninth and Tenth avenues and part of West Seminary can be rezoned from heavy industrial.

Residents had requested the area be rezoned for multiple family dwellings, but that request was denied by the planning commission in a 5-0 vote.

After the hearing, residents said they would petition the commission again, asking for a change to light industrial.

Hoopeston Area High School sets freshman orientation

Hoopeston Area High School orientation for new students and incoming freshmen has been set for 6:30 p.m. Aug. 17 in the high school auditorium.

At the orientation, an overview of registration will be given.

Registration will be 8:30 a.m. -11 a.m. Aug. 18, for students whose last names begin with letters A-L and 12:30 p.m.-3 p.m. for students with last names beginning with M-Z.

At orientation, new students will be asked to turn in their physical forms, fill out student information sheets and pay $28 textbook/locker fee.

Hackney believes his business, which he co-owns with David Lackey and Moe Schroeder, is reason for the zoning request.

The men repair cars and trucks and have several vehicles parked on their property.

Hackney maintains problems could have been avoided had neighbors come to him first. "We're community-minded people, too," he said, adding he and his partners are work with the Jaycees on the truck pull for the Sweetcorn Festival and are making a motorized float which Miss Hoopeston will ride on during the festival parade.

Hackney said he told residents he is willing to put a fence around the business and perhaps make other allowances, depending on what residents want.

In return, Hackney and his partners "want to be left alone."

Police News

A silver boy's bicycle was found Tuesday at Blue Sky Car Wash, 201 E. Main. The owner may identify and claim it at the police station.

A 14-year-old boy was charged with criminal damage to property Tuesday after he allegedly spray painted the Brown-Alkin Funeral Home, 309 W. Washington. The boy was released to his parents on a notice to appear.

Disagreement continued from other side

Hackney and alder person Susan Comstock said both sides will meet to discuss the issue, but a meeting has not been scheduled.

Hackney said his attitude is "let's all grab our lawn chairs, sit down and discuss this," but added he has not been contacted by residents. "I'm waiting for them to come to me," he said.

"All they've got to do is come to us," he said. "We're not bad guys. We won't rape or pillage anybody."
