The evil twin strikes again, or what's in a name change

Editor's Note: Lourdine took the day off. This column was submitted by her evil twin sister, Sardine. Lourdine claims no responsibility for its contents.

Well, she finally did it this time!
 In case you hadn't noticed the editor's box on the top of the papers last week, Lourdine's name is different - again (but then, with a name like Lourdine, who cares?)

She wouldn't say anything about this - and wouldn't want me to, either - but you hey, when the editor's away...

Anyhoo, she got a divorce about three weeks ago and she's been mopin' around ever since because the rumor mill has started grinding. People who have nothing better to do with their time are telling everybody who'll listen that she's been in various and sundry places with various and sundry people doing various and sundry things.

Much as I hate to say anything nice about her, it just ain't true.

Heck, for the most part, she's been sitting at home reveling in new experiences, like learning how to use the remote control, picking television shows she likes and learning how to cook for two.

What a bore!

I told her she could be havin' a whole lot of fun meeting new people and doing new things, but does she ever listen to me? No.

You know what else she does that's making me mad about this whole thing? She's nice to people who have no business asking her about the divorce.

She says they ask because they care, but I think they just want to know so they can spread rumors.

Why just the other day, somebody she barely knew called her, supposedly all concerned about how she was and what happened and Lourdine was actually pleasant.

I'd a given the caller a piece of my mind.

And she's such a good two-shoes.

You won't hear her complaining to too many people about why the marriage broke up. Says that's not the mature thing to do.

I tell you, something happens in her life, something she could get a lot of mileage from, and she doesn't even take advantage of it. She could be hound-dog eyed and frazzled, but think she would?

I'm almost ashamed to say we're related.
