methods used in manufacturing. Other trends included negative attitudes, population size and age, young people leaving the area and enforcement of ordinances.

Strengths listed were the capacity and quality of municipal utilities, good transportation linkages to I-57 and north-south on Rt. 1, local trucking/transportation businesses, central location to urban areas, local construction services, quality labor, low cost of living and rural lifestyle, elderly services, the school system, hospital, churches, other city services, a strong agricultural base and people able to cooperate when needed.

One of the strongest suggestions to come from the meeting was the need for participatory planning involving the community as a whole, needed for successful economic development, said Pat Curry of the University
