New Danville company to use employees for cleanup work

Employees of a new Danville company will be cleaning up in Hoopeston Wednesday.

Approximately 16 production workers employed by Fiberteq will help city workers with tree trimming and other cleanup efforts, said Earl Fuller, plant production leader.

Fiberteq makes the fiberglass paper used in insulation. The company plant is under construction on Southgate Drive in Danville.

Employees who have already been hired are attending training sessions and doing some work inside the plant. Fiberteq is also encouraging employees to participate in community service work such as Hoopeston's cleanup effort. "We wanted a couple opportunities to reach out to the community," Fuller said, adding employees may also be taking part in Danville Habitat For Humanity.

Company approval for the cleaning effort was given by plant manager John Sowels. Human resources director Lori Blackford will be in Hoopeston to organize the volunteers.

Fiberteq learned of the volunteer opportunity from employee and Hoopeston resident Stephen Highfill. Jeff Maire, son of Price Less owner Tom Maire, also is employed by the company. "We have several people with roots in the community," Fuller said.

The company's cleanup efforts are expected to begin at 7 a.m. and last until 3:30. The group will break for lunch from 12-1 and will meet at the American Legion which is providing the noon meal for volunteers.

Fiberteq is still taking applications for warehouse and production employees. The company hopes to hire 16 to 20 more workers, Fuller said.
