Hoopeston council takes no action on aggressive animals

The Hoopeston City Council is letting sleeping dogs lie, at least for now.

The council on Tuesday took no action on an aggressive dog ordinance.

The city's police committee met last Thursday to discuss the issue. "That will be the last meeting we have for a while until we can gather the facts," said chairman Ed Lotz.

The issue started last month with a request from Jerry Daniel that something be done about pit bulls in the 800 block of East Elm.

Since then, residents attended the committee meeting and have written letters asking the council to not ban the dogs but rather make owners accountable for their pets.

In other business, the council learned the city swimming pool will open Memorial Day with a free swim day.

On that day, season passes will be discounted
