Reality of current war not that pictured in military movies

Like many young boys, Timothy C. Walton grew up watching war movies.

Now a corporal, Walton, commander Bravo Company 2-327 IN, shared that the reality of wars in Iraq and Afghanistan has not matched what Hollywood portrays.

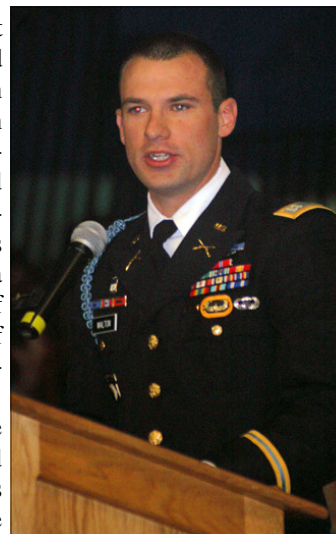

Walton was the keynote speaker at Hoopeston's Veterans Day ceremony, held Friday in the Hoopeston Area Middle School gym.

Frustration and anger rise up in soldiers who are confronted not with face-to-face combat with the enemy, but rather with improved explosive devices

(IED) throughout the area, said Walton. A veteran of action both in Iraq and Afghanistan, Walton said battles against Afghan soldiers was "aggressive," and a different type of fighting because of the country's mountainous regions.

Another difference between movies and actually serving is that actual service "gave me a new appreciation of what veterans had given up," Walton said, adding "how blessed America really is to have a strong government and a strong military."

Walton talked of the importance of "mail day" in See WAR on other side the lives of soldiers, and how good Americans have been supporting the troops. "You take our hands and support us even after we come back," he said.

To the students in the audience, Walton urged them to "stay in school, do your best."

Friday's ceremony also included performances by the high school chorus and band, reading of the names of veterans in attendance by school board member Lisa Leigh, and a welcome from high school Principal Larry Maynard, who called the community assembly "probably the day I look forward to the most" and "a rich experience that transcends several generations."

While many schools are not in session on Veterans Day, Hoopeston Area received a waiver and, for the last several years, has hosted the Veterans Day ceremony.
