No action taken on motel, liquor ordinance amendment

Like Mike Jagger, residents with issues on their minds got no satisfaction at Tuesday's Hoopeston City Council meeting.

Residents concerned about the Downtown Motel heard from Mayor Bill Crusinberry that Chief Mark Drollinger has been putting in many hours investigating the March murder at the motel and has not met with Crusinberry and city attorney Andrew Mudd, although Crusinberry expects to schedule a meeting soon.

Those waiting to see whether Hoopeston will amend its liquor ordinance to allow hard liquor to be sold at Hoopeston Marathon will have to wait at least until the next meeting.

At the April 1 meeting, Alderman Carl Ankenbrand said he would bring up the ordinance amendment at Tuesday's meeting, but he asked that it be tabled since Alderman Bill McElhaney was not present.

After the meeting, Ankenbrand said he would bring it up at the May 6 meeting, even if McElhaney is absent again.

Barb Knuth asked if any progress had been made about a house on Pine St. with raw sewage in the yard.

Knuth and her husband, Ron, were at the April 1 meeting to complaint about the matter but were told there was little the city could do since the property is outside city limits.

Crusinberry said the owner has been cited for violations by the county, has been fined, has appeared in court and is scheduled to appear again later this month.

In other business, the council:

- Approved $47,040 in Tax Increment Financing funds for Hoopeston Area schools to pay for 12 access doors at the high and middle schools and John Greer, said Alderman Bill Goodwine, finance committee chairman.
- Amended the city sign ordinance so that a 15' maximum does not apply to businesses on Routes 1 and 9.
- Approved a $5,756.58 bid from Flower & Herb Farmacy (formerly Farming with Flowers) for perpetual care urns at Floral Hill Cemetery. Alderwoman Nancy Stipp said the amount is less than the city paid last year.
- Heard from resident Alice Fink about possible funding for home improvements. Resident Jean Minick briefly discussed USDA grant and low-interest loan program.
- Set a budget meeting for 5:30 p.m. Tuesday.
- Heard from Alderman Brandon Hamilton that the city may be able to extend its golf cart ordinance to allow year-round motoring.
