Hoopeston Public Library displays a tribute to migrant Hoopeston Public Library Reading Room features vintage articles on the migrant contribution to the Hoopeston area.

For example, in Andre Fonaine's Nation Business (1951) magazine, it states that "Hoopeston has done the best job of any town in the country." Other articles point out the relationship of the canning companies and the migrant workers, many of whom were natives of Texas.

Rare, among the vintage collection, are the 1947-52 Hoopeston news clippings about migrant families. The photos and stories include priests, fiestas, canning factories, strikes, dances, pet shows, piñata customs, weddings, asparagus field workers and very importantly, opportunities for education.

Editorials stated and agreed that it was up to the town to give the migrant families the best it had. The community responded well. Local organizations offered social opportunities, arts and crafts classes, movies and ball teams. The medical profession offered many valuable services. The business community published the "50 Spanish Words" each business owner needed to know.

The Hoopeston message was clear: "Migrants endear themselves to everyone who gets to know them."

Patrons may display the tribute during the month of May.
