College for Kids provides hands-on learning to local youth

Hoopeston area youngsters were able to get a hands-on educational experience with some pretty cool stuff at College for Kids.

A Danville Area Community College program, College for Kids is being offered locally at the DACC-Higher Learning Center in Hoopeston.

Late last month, participants in the Experiments, Experiments and More experiments class worked their way up to making slime, while in LEGO Robotics, students used Lego Robotics kits to make different robots, ending the week-long session by making an automatic batting machine.

College for Kids classes are divided by age. Lego Robotics was designed for youngsters in grades three through five, while kids in grades four through six took part in the experiments classes.

Also offered in Hoopeston were American Sign Language, for grades 5-8; Brain Tease, grades 6-8; K-CSI Kids Crime Scene Investigation, grades 5-8; Page Turners; Show Me the Money, grades 4-8; and To Infinity and Beyond.

Instructor Ryan Johnson said participants in the robotics class were very enthusiastic to learn about robotics, including moving parts and sensors used to make robots responsive. Six students took advantage of the class, including Joshton and Ethan Schwartz, Pandora Jerome, Colin Deck, Owen McCormick and Jay Sprague.

A second round of classes will be held July 21-25 at the DACC-Higher Learning Center, 847 E. Orange. Cost is $45 per class. Registration ends the Wednesday before the first day of class and may be done online at www.dacc.edu/hoopeston or in person.

For more information, call the Center at (217) 283-4170.

Correction

It was incorrectly reported in the July 4 issue that an accident occurred when Jeanne Shore struck another vehicle driven by Sadie Hofer. In fact, Hofer struck Shore's vehicle.
