Engineer has humdinger of an idea for old fire bell on tower

A bell reportedly used to notify firemen of a fire back in the day could be reconditioned and displayed as part of Hoopeston history, said an engineer overseeing water tower work in Hoopeston.

The bell is on the water tower, which is currently undergoing renovations. Mike Streff, of Foth Infrastructure and Environment, suggested to alderman at Tuesday's Hoopeston City Council meeting that the bell, which had been painted white to match the water tower, be refurbished to its original metal and displayed at city hall.

Streff said work will now switch from the ground storage tank to the elevated tank because July and August are historically the months with the least amount of wind, therefore more conducive to painting the aerial structure.

He expressed concern about the number of antennas affixed to the water tower and whether they all work and if they may be disconnected for maintenance. Alderman Brandon Hamilton, police committee chairman, said he will have EMA director Scott Strawser contact Streff.

In related discussion, Streff said the water tank project has a new manager. Megan Smith has been with Leander Construction for one year but has eight years of project management, he said, adding he expects the project's pace to quicken under the new manager.

In other business, Alderman Randy Carter said more work will be done under the Motor Fuel Tax program for the same $150,000 approved by the council earlier this year.

Because the bid came in lower, new projects will include sidewalks and curbing at Craftsman Printing and the Christian Church and alley behind Neal Tire will be redone.
