Rossville residents invited to meeting on high tech pharmacy

ROSSVILLE—Residents here are invited to a meeting that could result in a new kind of pharmacy locating in the community.

TelePharm, an Iowa-based company, will hold an informational meeting at 6 p.m. Wednesday at Rossville Municipal Building, 120 E. Attica, said Greg James, TelePharm director of business development and marketing.

A.J. Lipka, of TelePharm, will be on hand to present information on the company and answer residents' questions, James said.

TelePharm began in 2012, when company founders discovered a way to provide pharmacy services in rural areas without an on-site pharmacist.

Using technology, TelePharm has a network of registered pharmacists that interact with pharmacies in smaller, rural communities, spreading the cost of the pharmacist among them.

Currently, TelePharm is powering over 100 stores in the Midwest, James said, adding the company is "looking to expand rapidly in Illinois" due to changes in the state's telepharmacy laws in 2013.

Illinois law defines telepharmacy as the provision of pharmacist care by a pharmacist through the use of telecommunications or other technologies to patients or their agents who are at a distance within the United States. Telepharmacy must follow all federal and state laws, rules, and regulations regarding privacy and security.

By law, the pharmacist in charge must:

1. be responsible for the practice of telepharmacy performed at a remote pharmacy, including supervising any prescription dispensing machine or automated medication system;
2. ensure that the home pharmacy has sufficient pharmacists on duty to safely operate and supervise all remote pharmacies;
3. ensure, through the use of a video and auditory communication system, that a certified pharmacy technician at the remote pharmacy has accurately and correctly prepared any prescription for dispensing according to the prescription;
4. supervise and train certified pharmacy technicians at remote pharmacies; and
5. ensure that patient counseling at the remote pharmacy

is performed by a pharmacist or student pharmacist.

The public meeting is just the first step in opening a pharmacy, James said.

If there is public support, TelePharm will look for a building in Rossville to house the pharmacy. One or two pharmacy technicians will be hired to fill prescriptions and interact with customers.

TelePharm plans to hire local people for their pharmacies, James said. Often, the new technician will be one currently hired by a pharmacy in a neighboring city.

Since Illinois law requires filled prescriptions to be reviewed by a pharmacist, imaging equipment in the pharmacy will send pictures to the pharmacist for approval. Images will be kept for 10 years, James said.

Customers who want to speak to a pharmacist will be able to do that via touch screen. One touch of a button will bring the customer face to face, via screen, to discuss medications, he said. Ninety percent of the time, customers will speak with the same pharmacist, James said.

James said it's his job to find new locations for pharmacies. "I'm usually neck-deep in data," he said, laughing. Typically, pharmacies are located in communities that don't currently have one, but that do have a medical center. Adding a pharmacy gives residents more of a total care package, since they are able to get care and medicine in their community, he said.

The community meeting is key to the whole process, as TelePharm tries to "get the community involved and engaged at the beginning," James said. "I can do data all day, but it doesn't tell me about human behavior."

TelePharm's prices are "very competitive" with pharmacies currently used by residents. Available drugs will be tailored to the community, based on information provided by health providers and modified as needs change, James said.
