Community members to have say in school chief via survey

Members of the Hoopeston Area School District are asked to take an online survey to help select a new superintendent.

The survey, available on the district website, www.hoopeston.k12.il.us, asks participants to choose five of 15 statements concerning traits or skills that respondents think are most important in matching a new superintendent to the district.

Characteristics on the list include someone who promotes the success of every student; one who collaborates with faculty and community members; one who has integrity, fairness and is ethical; one who can assess data to anticipate emerging trends.

The survey also asks respondents whether it is important that the new superintendent has previous experience

Storm spares Hoopeston

A late night storm Wednesday that spawned high winds, tornadoes and large hail largely left Hoopeston alone.

Afternoon predictions had the worst of the storm hitting the area between 5 p.m. and 10 p.m. In reality, the action was just getting started at 10 p.m.

Cissna Park received damage and an unconfirmed tornado was reported in Claytonville and four miles west of Hoopeston. Just north of Wellington, some corn reflected that strong winds had passed through the area.

Pontiac was hit by a tornado associated with the storm. As it continued eastward, another twister was confirmed over Chatsworth.

An earlier storm Wednesday and the later one provided some much-needed rain in the area, with totals of about one inch.

as a superintendent and whether it is important that the new school chief will live in the district after being hired.

A place is available for respondents to add additional comments to the survey. Survey responses are anonymous, according to the district website.

The survey will be available online until 11:45 p.m. July 13.

With Supt. Hank Hornbeck set to retire in 2017, the school board has approved spending $7,400 for an Illinois Association of School Boards (IASB) superintendent search.

Search consultant Jim Helton said the IASB will advertise the position and accept applications which will be screened according to criteria supplied by the board. Information on five or six candidates will be brought to the board.
