Some races to be had in April municipal, school elections

One Hoopeston alderman and one member of the Hoopeston Area School Board will have competition in the April 2017 election.

Those who met Monday's filing deadline for a four-year seat to represent Hoopeston's Ward 2 include incumbent Ald. Carl Ankenbrand and newcomers, Randall Wallace and Charles Strawser.

Village to lose experience as three incumbents opt out of race

ROSSVILLE—The majority of the Rossville Village Board will be new after the April 2017 election as three incumbents did not file for reelection.

Nancy Null, Jim Smith and Steven Stream are not running to keep their board seats. Instead, Jacqueline R. Maden, Scott Leaver and Michael Mahorney are running for three four-year terms.

Maden is currently serving the two-year unexpired term of previous trustee Rodger Wolfe.

No one had filed to fill the two-year unexpired term by Monday's filing deadline.

Mayor Dick Queen and Clerk Chris White are running unopposed.

This is Strawser's second attempt to unseat Ankenbrand. He unsuccessfully ran against the incumbent in April 2013.

On the school board side, incumbent Lisa Leigh is one of three people running for two seats from the area outside the original Hoopeston School District area. Newcomers include Jonathan Layden and Craig Lee.

Incumbent board member and current president Russ Walder did not seek reelection.

On the in-district side, incumbents Lawrence Jahn
