Voters head to the polls for municipal, township, school issues

A higher-than-average turnout is expected Tuesday in the Rossville-Alvin and Bismarck-Henning school districts, where voters will give thumbs up or down on a new cooperative high school. The issue must pass in both districts to be successful.

If the measure fails, the Rossville-Alvin School Board will have to decide what to do with the district's high school students who, for the past several years, have had the option of attending either Hoopeston Area or Bismarck-Henning. A tri-party agreement among the districts was cancelled after the board decided to put the co-op high school to the voters.

In other races:

Incumbents Lawrence Jahn and Dave McFadden, along with newcomer Debbie Klaber, are running for two seats on the former Hoopeston School District part of the Hoopeston Area School Board. Incumbent Lisa Leigh and challengers Craig Lee and Jonathan Layden are seeking two seats on the "out of town" part of the school board.

In Hoopeston Ward 2, Ald. Carl Ankenbrand faces two challengers, Charles Strawser and Randall Wallace.

In Grant Township, incumbent Republican Road Commissioner Martin Maul is being challenged by Independent
