Waiver approval could net a new students for HA schools

A waiver that, if approved by the state, would allow Hoopeston Area to offer free tuition to children of full time staff who live outside the district, could result in a handful of new students in the near term and perhaps more in the long term.

At a public hearing before Thursday's board meeting, the school board discussed applying for the waiver which would allow full time employees who live out of the district to forego Hoopeston Area's $8,560.80 tuition.

The district would receive state aid for students who attend Hoopeston Area schools under the plan, which is $6,125 per pupil, said business manager Mark Eighner.

Supt. Suzzette Hesser said the move is a good one for the schools and the community. For the schools, it would be a tool to entice new teachers to teach at Hoopeston. For current teachers, having their children in the same district would provide peace of mind. Also, with their youngsters close, teachers would not feel the need to rush off after school, she said.

As far as the community, employees and children who interact in Hoopeston more - through school, sporting events, community activities and thing like shopping - may decide to become Hoopeston residents.

Three people spoke at a public hearing dedicated to the waiver. District librarian Jacki Gregory, who last year told the board that some districts waive tuition for their employees' children, read a statement echoing Hesser's reasoning, adding that teachers who have their children in district would be more dedicated and spend more time at work.

Former board member Dave McFadden read a letter he wrote to Hesser, saying as a business owner, he knows the benefit of a stable school system and that applying for the waiver would improve that stability. The measure "appears to be positive cash flow for the district," he added.

Glenn Brewer, Hoopeston Education Association president, said people he talked to were positive about the idea.

While none in attendance had negative comments during the waiver hearing, the subject came up during the tax levy hearing which preceded the waiver hearing.

Hoopeston resident Stan Steiner said, concerning recent articles about school finance, "I personally got mixed signals from reading the paper."

On one hand, he said, officials want a 7.5 percent increase in the levy, which would raise tax dollars if the district's equalized assessed valuation goes up, and also want a referendum for a one percent county wide facilities sales tax on the March 20 general primary ballot, both of which indicate a lack of money.

On the other hand, the board wants to give free tuition to out-of-district students, recently installed an all-weather track costing hundreds of thousands of dollars and gives six percent pay increases for the final three years of a teacher's tenure, which, for higher-paid teachers, "is a $15,000 raise," he said. "We have plenty of money for that. That shows me we're flush."

Eighner explained that the 7.5 percent tax levy does not mean taxes will go up and said the track was paid with donations, not tax dollars.

Part of funding for the track is coming from the City of Hoopeston's tax increment financing program, prompting Steiner to as "Where do you think TIF money came from?"

Eighner clarified and said no school tax dollars were used for the track.

After the meeting, Hesser said six to eight current full time employees could take advantage of the free tuition if the waiver is approved.

The board will meet in special session at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday to discuss approving the waiver. If approved, it will be sent to the Illinois State Board of Education, then presented to the Illinois legislature for approval.

Hesser said as she has no knowledge of legislators denying a waiver request.
