Man accuses council of stealing building by tearing it down

Jeff Coss accused the Hoopeston City Council of damaging his building at 220 E. Main.

"I'd like to report a crime," Coss said at Tuesday's Hoopeston City Council meeting. "You tore my building down without ownership or due process." He further accused officials of trespassing on the property. "You are currently committing a crime," he said.

City attorney Charles Mockbee recommended Coss See BUILDING on other side

The building has not yet been demolished, however Coss alleges workers removed things from the building without his approval.

On September 17, the city served Coss with a notice giving him 10 days to begin remediation on the property or the city would demolish it and bring him to court to recoup the costs.

Coss posted the notice on social media on September 19, alleging demolition crew workers were taking things from the building without his permission.

The council went into executive session at Tuesday's meeting to discuss the matter but took no action on it.

In other discussion, Ald. Brandon Hamilton, police committee chairman, announced two full time officers have been hired.

Marvin Dobkins, who was hired May 4 as a part time officer, has transitioned to full time duty. A life-long Hoopeston resident and 33-year veteran of Hoopeston Auxiliary Police, Dobkins worked for Illinois Department of Corrections from 1985-2016, retiring as a major.

He was employed as a part time officer in 2004 and received full time certification in 2007. He started his new position on September 28.

The second officer is Joshua Douglas, a Watseka native. He grew up in the field as his father, Jeremy, currently serves as Watseka police chief.

Douglas served on the Watseka Auxiliary Police force before being hired at Hoopeston. He started training on September 30 at the Macon County Law Enforcement Training Center.

The new hires bring the department up to full capacity, with Chief Jim DeWitt, Sergeants Quentin Morgan and Jeremy Welch, Investigators Darin Tate and
