Roof renovation work to start on historic Lorraine Theatre

The historic Lorraine Theatre is getting a new roof this week.

Workers from Advanced Commercial Roofing (ACR) of Champaign got an early start Thursday morning, loading supplies on a crane, which lifted them skyward to the top of the theater.

The project is expected to take only two or three days to complete, said Alex Houmes, vice president of Save the Lorraine Foundation. A new roof is being laid over the existing roof.

Existing roof drains are also being replaced with scupper drains that take water directly off the roof, rather than taking it through the building first, Houmes said.

ACR has worked with the foundation for several years, providing estimates as the organization sought funding for the work. Originally estimated at almost $41,000, the total is now more than $50,000. The foundation began fundraising at the end of 2019, but Covid-19 halted those efforts and closed the theater for more than a year.

Earlier this year, the foundation requested and received $50,000 from Hoopeston's tax increment financing fund. Although the foundation won't pay the city's investment

A crane lifts roofing supplies atop the Lorraine Theatre early Thursday morning. Advanced Commercial Roofing of Champaign was chosen for the project directly, it will indirectly, through traffic brought in by shows and events at the theater, providing additional tax dollars, Houmes said.

The new room will push the Lorraine project past the halfway point and allow the board to enter a new phase of refurbishing, including electrical wiring, the front entryway, concessions area, auditorium sound panels, flooring, décor details, performance equipment/structure expansion and implementing first-run movie equipment.
