Interim Police Chief Darin Tate with the department's new squad car, featuring a barely-there "ghost" logo, designed to allow the car and its officers to be more stealthy. Tate retires from the force this week.

After nearly 24 years, Tate hangs up his badge, retires

Darin Tate still remembers the day he came to Hoopeston to pick up an application to be a Hoopeston officer.

After graduating in 1996 with a bachelor's degree in criminology, Tate was a loss prevention supervisor for the former Elder Beerman store in Danville. Emily Burton, of Hoopeston, worked there at the time and told Tate there was an opening on the force.

Tate drove to Hoopeston in a black Camaro and walked up to the police department window. Dispatcher Brenda Gaither and Officer Chuck Moyer were in the radio room. Both perked up as the young man approached the window, wondering why he was there. Tate's request for an application elicited an "Oh, here," from Mrs. Gaither, who pushed the application under the window, then returned to her station to resume her conversation with Mo-

It was an inauspicious beginning to Tate's time at HPD, but luckily, it didn't stay that way. Mrs. Gaither warmed up to him and the two shared lots of laughs even after she retired from the department.

Moyer and Tate had a good working relationship and when Mover - who started as a patrolman had become an

From the Blotter

The 1995 Ford Ranger reported stolen early Tuesday morning was found at 11 am. Tuesday in rural Milford. Iroquois County Sheriff's deputies located the truck and notified Hoopeston police.

Michelle R. Coffey, 46, of Hoopeston, was arrested after a traffic stop at 3 p.m. Tuesday. She was charged with suspended registration and no proof of insurance and was released on notices to appear in Vermilion County court. Her vehicle was towed from the scene in the 700 block of South Fourth St.

investigator - resigned, Tate followed the Moyer's path, becoming an investigator in 2002, and eventually the department's lead investigator.

Tate started with the department on September 12, 1998, but his desire to be in law enforcement went back to his early years, when he played "cops and robbers" and also "FBI agent."

When he got older, his parents encouraged him to become a podiatrist. Just a few steps in that direction let him know that wasn't his career path. Seeing his quandary, his grandmother asked him what he played the most when he was young. It was then he decided to follow his childhood passion. "I've been happy with (the decision)," he said.

Tate has a deep sense of right and wrong and, even in play, "I wanted to put bad people in jail," he said. As an adult, "I like being able to actually help somebody," he said, quickly adding that with the do's and don'ts of the law, there is often little actual 'helping.'

In March, Tate was named interim chief. As such, he was involved in recent contract negotiations and created new policies to increase officer patrolling for ordinance violations and a system to notify residents who requested extra patrol that their request was being carried out.

Tate applied for the chief's position and was one of four people to be interviewed for it. When he was not selected, and with many law enforcement changes coming in January, he opted to retire. "I resigned because of politics and I did not like the road law enforcement was going down because of them," he said.

The changes are part of a sweeping package passed by the General Assembly and signed by Gov. J.B. Pritzker that, among other things, eliminates cash bail for many serious offenses.

Tate's son, Hunter, plans to follow in his father's footsteps in law enforcement and is studying at Indiana University. Tate said he has talked with him about not taking a job in Illinois unless the laws are changed.

His daughter, Makenzie, is a freshman at the University of Illinois, where she plans to study medicine.

Tate and his wife, Lisa's oldest son is Jordan, who lives in Hoopeston and works at Casey's.

He will officially be retired Saturday, but he has mixed feelings about it. On one hand, he looks forward to not being called out in the middle of the night or having to work weekends or holidays and spending time with his wife and dog. Being retired, and with Lisa changing her work schedule, the couple plan to visit their children at college.

On the other hand, at 49, he's still young enough to want to contribute, so he is looking for another job, perhaps in police work or a related field.

For now, the Tates plan to stay in Hoopeston, but that could change. Lisa's family has all left Hoopeston. His parents are getting older and the couple discussed moving to Chrisman, his hometown, to be closer to them. They've also discussed moving someplace warmer.

Wherever he goes, Tate takes with him mostly good memories of his tenure at HPD. "Maybe not all of my clientele," he said, "but there are many people who really do care about Hoopeston."
